In the still darkness of the sultry room, the only light comes from a digital clock on an otherwise empty nightstand. The soft cushiony sound of fabric radiates through the air from body weight that is clumsily repositioning, temporarily concealing the rasp of heavy breathing which is slowly returning to normal. There then follows the awkward silence before the inevitable discussion.

Was it good for you?

Well, it was fantastic. I wouldn't have thought I'd be comfortable doin it with that many people.

Do you want to do it again?

You mean right now!! I.....a....

Not right now, honey bun. I'll let you catch your breath.

Wheeeew What was with the guy who said he was the Pillsbury Doughboy. He kept insisting that he had a knead to "Make the Buns"?

Oh.....you met him. Aaa.....he's an old hasher. We mixed a lot of flour back in the day.

Is that how you got your name?

Ummm.....something like that.

Posthumously, DM

The Play-by-play: Nice bar, beautiful day, big crowd, chalk talk, on-out, down into the ravine bun crack, up out of the bun crack, down bun crack, up bun crack, shot stop, climb out of the bun crack to the neighborhood road, road, road, road, down into a new bun crack, beer stop, out the bottom of the bun crack and across the highway, community park, nature trails, beer stop, on-in on the neighborhood roads, up, up, up, find your car in the parking lot, drive to the house of Buns, yell obscenities at hasher with the tight pink shorts, oops...that's a juvenile spawn of Buns, pink buns?, break-in to house, drink beer, eat food, drink beer, eat food, have dessert. Bun-alicious Hash!
