They're not a rock band spin-off. We're not sure if they're squashes, gourds, fruits, or vegetables. But, harriers and harriets, we proudly present, the Hashing Pumpkins!

It seems that our pumpkins had a lot of themselves leftover from the holidays, because over the entire trail we were "treated" to all manner of pumpkin concoctions.

Our pumpkins started us out at Over The Bar out in the wild backwoods country of North Park.

Still within eye shot of the bar, we crashed the local tree top adventure site.

Given the miracle of nobody injuring themselves, the harriets rewarded the pack with some "interesting" pudding shots. They must have stayed up all night working on those gelatinous gobs...

Ducking past the local dog park, the pumpkins decided to help maintain the local tick population with a donation of fresh blood. And just in case that didn't make everyone woozy enough, it was time for a fresh infusion of pumpkin laced lager.

To scare the muggles at the local golfing range, our harriets then took the pack straight up the hill to a fairway. Dodging errant drives, the kennel proceeded to wash their balls at tee #5 using another disgusting pumpkin combination.

Most of the half-minds made it through past the golfers generally unmolested, although at least one had a run-in with the golf police, for reasons totally unexpected and unexplainable to us mere mortals.

Hole in one?

A quick tramp through the woods brought us to the local ranger's house, Nurse Kendoll. Sadly Rick, Yogi, and Booboo weren't there, and the we had to make due with another round of pumpkin libations.

Those who stuck it out for circle were given yet more lashings of pumpkin goodness. Thanks go out to Squirreleo for his donation of a sixtel of Jacko Traveler Shandy, which was much appreciated in circle. Our lone visitor claimed to have had a good time, even though the voracious vultures ate her box of pretzels.
